Wildlife Damage Management Contractors

Information You Need Before Selecting a Company

This document is provided for people to find contractors to provide wildlife damage management services. For additions, edits, or deletions, please email Sharon Bokan, CSU Extension, Boulder County, sbokan@bouldercounty.org NO ENDORSEMENTS IMPLIED.

It is important to find a company with which you feel comfortable and fits your specific needs. Not all companies deal with all animals and insects, some animals such as bats and bees have special needs. Many of the listed companies have web sites that provide educational information about wildlife behavior and habitat. Understanding why animals do what they do will help you make an informed decision when selecting a company.

An example of questions to ask:

- Are references available?
- What kind of pests and wildlife do they manage?
- Is the company insured (i.e. liability)/bonded?
- How many years have they been in business?
- What kind of training have they received or taken?
- Is the company licensed by state or county?
- Have they provided different options for handling the problem?
- Do they provide a written contract that clearly describes the service they will provide?
- Do they know the federal, state and local laws that may determine how they handle the problem?
- Will chemicals or traps be used, if so what kind.
- If animal is live trapped what is done with animal?
- How often are traps checked?
- How does the company charge for service?

Be aware that many species may not be relocated. The Colorado Division of Parks and Wildlife has specific regulations regarding relocation of some animals. Please call either the Colorado Division of Parks and Wildlife or the Extension Office Wildlife Masters for the regulations.
